One Crazy Wedding Day

Pierre Beaumarchais (1732-99), adventurer, speculator, inventor, rogue and man of the theatre scored France's highest grossing hit of the 18th century with his play Le Folie Journée, ou le Mariage de Figaro, which premiered in Paris on 27 April 1784. The farcical tale of a libidinous Count outmanoeuvred by his staff - and in particular by the very maid who is the immediate object of his lust - struck a note with audiences of the time, whose bourgeois aspirations were only five years away from exploding into revolution. Beaumarchais had read the zeitgeist, and the people lapped it up.

Two years later Wolfgang Mozart and Lorenzo da Ponte, the greatest collaborative team in the history of opera, gave Beaumarchais' characters the gift of immortal song when Le nozze di Figaro premiered in Vienna on 1 May 1786. In an era of no radio or recordings, wind ensembles (or Harmoniemusik), helped to familiarise listeners with tunes from the latest operas. One of the best arrangers of the genre was Johann Nepomuk Wendt (1745-1801), whose wind suites from Figaro, Così fan tutte, Il Seraglio and numerous other operas carried their melodies beyond the theatre to the terraces and dining rooms of private homes.

Synopsis

The action unfolds at the palace of Count Almaviva in Seville. It is the wedding day of Figaro, valet to the Count, and Susanna, maid to the Countess. The Count has had his eye on Susanna for some time, and hopes furtively to invoke the ancient privilege of droit de seigneur on her wedding night, allowing him to enjoy her before her new husband. Further obstacles in the young couple's path include middle-aged Marcellina, who claims a legal hold over Figaro, and Cherubino, the horny page-boy whose sudden explosion into puberty has thrown him into confusion and the household into mayhem. The last piece in the puzzle is the young Countess Rosina, sadly aware of her husband's infidelities but powerless to stop loving him. She and Susanna realise they must join forces to bring the Count to account.
